

I do not believe any business, bank or otherwise, has the right to contact me at home for the express purpose of soliciting my business. This should have been clear to ALL when I made application to be on the Indiana "do not call" list to begin with. A home should be a refuge, a sanctuary, a place to escape the daily stresses and noise we face in our modern world. For the first time in years - since being on the do not call list - I have been able to enjoy meals and conversation with family and friends without rude interruptions. When I am tired or ill, I can lay down and rest without the constant jangling of the telephone. If I choose to stay up late, I know I can sleep undisturbed a little longer in the morning. I can complete tasks without having to stop to listen to sales pitches. The Banking industry may sound like they are the ones suffering, but the one who pays the ultimate price is the consumer - the aggravation, stress, etc. that comes from phone solicitors is enormous. I pay for my telephone service, and I should have a right to refuse solicitors who want to dial my number!!!! Signed, Penny J. Price
